The commission said investors were not told that the state was contributing far less to the pensions than was required each year. These costs are variable and difficult to predict going forward in a consistent manner - yet nevertheless they are still important. This mission involves investigation and research into financial activities in diverse spheres of human endeavor to determine if financial transactions, instruments or actors are ethical and if not, why not.

As shown by our recent financial crisis, this was a design flaw. I like what they do and how they do it, for many reasons: - They work in a very transparent manner; correspondence with witnesses gets published promptly on their website and anybody can watch their committee meetings live or on catch-up through Parliament TV. My answer is this - the political culture of the state tolerates corruption, so it grows like a weed in obscure places like the Kentucky Retirement System.
