In common usage from onward, "Palestine" was used either to describe the consular jurisdictions of the Western powers [] or for a region that extended in the north-south direction typically from Rafah south-east of Gaza to the Litani River now in Lebanon. However, despite seven further crusades from Europe, the crusader state was no longer a significant power in the region after the fall of Jerusalem in For four months, under continuous Arab provocation and attack, the Yishuv was usually on the defensive while occasionally retaliating.
